New York, NY – More than 10,000 drivers in New York and South Carolina have been able to renew their driver's license completely remotely after passing Cleared to Drive's online eye test.

Dr. Kerinna McDonald, an optometrist licensed in both states, founded Cleared to Drive last year to help drivers have a far more convenient experience renewing their license. Both New York and South Carolina require a vision test for the renewal — one that previously could only be completed in-person at an approved location.

“Being able to renew your driver's license online sounds really convenient, but going in-person to take the mandatory vision screening defeats the purpose,” Dr. McDonald said. “Cleared to Drive's online vision test turns what used to be highly inconvenient into a fast, easy and enjoyable process completed in just minutes.”

The young healthcare tech company has grown rapidly during the COVID-19 pandemic to meet client demand. The milestone of 10,000 customers served comes about six months after the service launched in New York and a few weeks after the company's first expansion to South Carolina this year.

Cleared to Drive's test keeps license renewal seekers safe from potential COVID-19 exposure. It safeguards their wallets as well, as customers pay for the test only if they pass it. For drivers who pass the vision screening, Cleared to Drive electronically submits the results to their state's DMV.

The online eye test can be taken using a phone, laptop, or tablet and is currently available to residents of the states of New York and South Carolina. To learn more, visit www.clearedtodrive.com or contact the company directly at press@clearedtodrive.com.
